Higher Education Leadership and Policy (Ed.D.)

The Ed.D. Program at Vanderbilt University’s Peabody College offers a weekend-based curriculum that blends theory and practice and is designed to meet the needs of mid-career education professionals from around the country. Peabody College’s executive Ed.D. Program is pursued with a cohort of your peers and centers on the problems of education practice and policy. The Ed.D. Program trains scholar-practitioners whose knowledge, leadership, analytical and management skills enhance the performance of higher education institutions and organizations. The Ed.D. Program culminates in a year-long capstone project that challenges students to apply knowledge and skills acquired through doctoral study to a real-world problem in higher education practice and policy.

Career Paths
The Ed.D. Program prepares students for leadership positions in higher education institutions and policy-related organizations including colleges and universities; state and federal education agencies; foundations; professional associations; nonprofit organizations; and research and consulting firms.

What Our Graduates Say
“Vanderbilt’s Peabody College provided me an enriching graduate educational and professional experience, empowering me to make meaningful contributions as a higher education practitioner and scholar. From renowned faculty to extraordinary classmates from diverse professional and educational backgrounds, my time as a doctoral student was life-changing. Becoming an alumna of Peabody is, without question, one of my proudest achievements.”
